THE best Pneumatic Tire is only as strong as its weakest part.

Strengthening its strongest parts is as useless as putting a fifth Wheel on a Wagon.

Yet this is often done to provide "Selling-feature" and "Talking Point."

The weakest part of every Pneumatic Tire is its Walls or Sides, not its Tread,—its Cotton Fabric or "Stocking," not its Rubber Sole.

No price would be too high to pay for a material that, replacing Cotton in the Walls of Pneumatic Tires, would last as long as the Goodrich Rubber Tread could be made to wear.

Neither Silk, nor Linen, nor any other known Fabric yet discovered is so good, for this purpose, as Cotton, and choice long-fibred Cotton is the best material that money can buy for Tire Fabric.

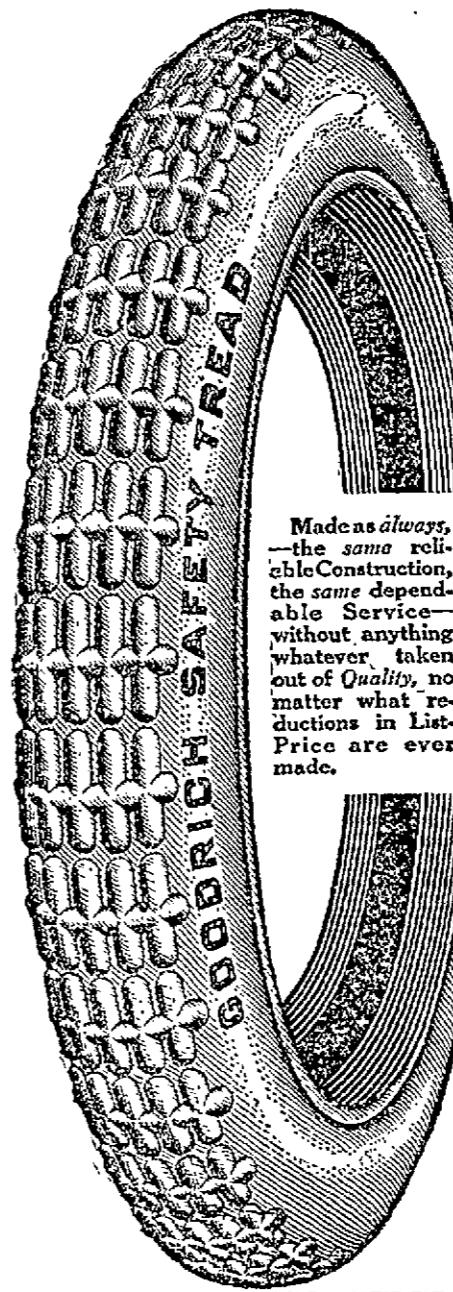

WE use nothing less in Goodrich Tires, and test every foot of it up to 380 lbs. to the Square Inch, before we percolate it with the most adhesive Rubber Compound ever made for this purpose.

We then shape this rubberized Fabric into Tires, with scrupulous care to have the tension on each square inch of fabric precisely the same,—that tension being controlled by a machine as sensitive as the eye, and infinitely more precise than the handwork of the most skilled Operative could make it.

To do this work we have the most highly-trained men in the Rubber Industry,—trained in the Precision that practice and our 45-year EXPERIENCE make perfect.

NO Tire Manufacturer, if he received a price of $200 per Tire, could put better Fabric into the Walls of his Tires, use greater care, more sensitively adjusted Tension devices, or more adhesive Rubber between each layer of fabric.

Because, we know the vital importance of THE BEST in this part of the Tire, and use it there unsparingly.

Only 5% Plus for this Best Non-Skid Tire

BARGAIN DAY.

This is the Bargain Day edition of The Courier.

We present our readers with 16 pages of newspaper contained in two sections of 8 pages each. The paper will contain something worth while reading. Its news columns will be found interesting. They are filled with better type, more matter, and have bold and large type matter, and in this respect they are no doubt in refreshing contrast with some editions recently put out in the country.

Put the most profitable reading matter in this edition to contained in the Bargain Day announcements of the Connellsville merchant.

It is a day is not new in Connellsville. It has been an annual custom for the past five years. It has been highly successful, first because it is thoroughly advertised, and second because the Connellsville merchants make it a point to offer real bargains to the public.

A man may feel the people once by advertising things he does not deliver, but he cannot do so again. The quality of the transaction soon becomes apparent to the buyer and he is no more at that store. Worse than that, he tells the neighbors about it.

Connellsville merchants have thoroughly learned two things, namely, (1) that it does pay to advertise, especially in the home paper, if it is intelligently done, and (2) that it does not pay to fail to make good all advertising promises. We have personal knowledge of some promises which were mistakenly made but unfortunately made good at considerable cost to the advertiser.

Bargain Day is to a great extent clearing day, with all that this means in the way of reduced price. This year two days have been set apart for this purpose. The day and Wednesday, August 3rd and 4th, and on the second day the Connellsville merchants will present some interesting propositions, a general outline of which may be found in their advertisements, and the public can rest assured that these are real bargains not fake offers.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.
Europe is in a state of carnage such as the world has not seen since the military authorities there that the end is not in sight. Emperor William is credited with having declared that the war will end in October. Whether or not he made such a declaration, he seems to be the only monarch who is making an excessive effort to meet that schedule by beating his enemies to it.

The news from Poland indicates that the Polish country is about to be abandoned by the Germans. If this is so, it is not much of a surprise, for the latter had received a crushing blow from which they will not soon recover. We may, however, expect in no time that the Germans will lose no time in concentrating their forces on the western frontier for a drive at the French and English with a view to capturing Paris and forcing a truce. The German forces of the Allies to the rear of the main movement will be driven out of Poland and into the German front in France. In the eastern fight may be a wise decision, but most observers will favor it in a less favorable light. The conclusion is irresistible that the Allies will be unable to cope with the Germans after the latter have cleared the last line of Poland and are still content with their forces in the west.

If the Germans succeed in advancing in the east and driving out the French, will it not be a great disaster? With the English, the French, the Germans and the Italian allies, the Allies will be compelled to join in terms of peace, and that Emperor William's pet dream will come true. However, the war would have been over in six weeks if the Germans had given up. In their three great drives to the west, they did do it, and no doubt may happen to Emperor William in a new province between now and then.

In the meantime, it should be the policy of the United States to peacefully and carefully watch and wait.

BIG CRIME.

Charles Peeler, chief of the New York strong arm squad, went to his death protesting his innocence of having conspired to procure the murder of a man named Herman Rosenthal. It is hard to believe that a man in such a position with an appeal for divine mercy as he had, would upon his trial, let the evidence against Peeler ring and ring again. The fact that he died without finding sufficient physical evidence in spite of great efforts to do so is most striking.

He left with a grin in the lounge of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. This is a powerful office of the law, and to have been the most feared policemen in New York City, all in one, is indeed a great achievement. Peeler, a former police captain of Cleveland, and the author of many a successful murder, and to have been put to death for a single killing is most remarkable.

Peeler may have been innocent of the crime for which he suffered death, but he was guilty of many others, and the popular verdict is that the law has made no mistake.

Pennsylvania is the leading state in the steel industry. Its output being more than one-half the total of the United States, and this is the center of Western Pennsylvania in the center of the industry of the state. The industry is in here, and the founder of the Mellon company was one of the pioneers.

The Connellsville coke trade is the leading in the country, and in the steel business.

The center man may be useful in keeping the men apart from running over each other, but he seldom bothers himself much about the politician who is trying to get across without being run down.

The Good Roads movement for 1916 shows this end of the country holding up its end all right.

Even the truck drivers of Connellsville are getting the sound mania.

Fruit farm values are going up in the Connellsville coke region, but the growth is in the gardens.

It is Unpton's day. Unpton Day, and the town did very well for an amateur.

The old buildings in Church Place seem bent on demonstrating their dangerous character.

Freight county, Kentucky, comes to the front and with a juvenile shotgun. He is due to have a determinate sentence.

Connellsville merchants know how to make bargains very successful. They have a record which speaks for them.

Will it be bargain day in Europe on October 1st?

Come to Connellsville next Tuesday or Wednesday, or better still come both days. Come on and stay late. Look around carefully. You'll find the bargains here.

It looks as if the wanted Swallow was on the prowl.

The trading stamp hangs on like the itch.

After the business of Presidents Day the Connellsville merchants will lock up the town and take a day off.

Gabrielle d'Annunzio

By GEORGE FITCH.
Author of "At Good Old Sweet's."

In America the successful author became rich and soon thereafter allowed to go into the movies.

In Italy, his nature is more violently ours. The author who has probably sold more books in Italy than any other author, is the Italian author, Gabriele d'Annunzio, the Italian author who wrote the tragedy in the Captain's Hill in Rome in May and demanded that in such eloquent terms that the government obliged him to prevent the press from giving it a playright to it.

d'Annunzio is the most exciting literary figure in Europe. When he is not changing the title of his latest book, he is the most popular man in Italy. D'Annunzio is a writer of new, romantic material, or something that he is about to commit suicide in order to save his life from the severe pain of a stroke of apoplexy.

THE CORNER COP;
HIS WORD IS LAW
FOR ALL TRAFFIC*Patrolman Who Draws the Brimstone Corner Job
Is Kept Busy.*STANDING STILL NO SOFT SNAP*Heed on the Feet, and There Isn't Any Shade Near These Sultry Days; He Keeps the Automobiles and Street
Cars from Getting All Mussed Up.*The job that looks about the easiest one in town, and really is nearly the most difficult, is that of supervisor on Brimstone Corner. It isn't an easy job to be sure. Mayor Marlett has recently adopted the system of having the men on duty take a turn at keeping the corner. For a long time the corner used to be the job of one man, but had a 12-hour pull, which was a little long for comfort.*Lots of folks think it would be a snap to stand still. The cops suggest that anyone having that idea try it once. Just go into the back yard, they say, and try standing in the sun
for an hour, and see how it feels. It is a tiresome task, at best, and the corner supervisor is bound to be tired out in a short time.*Some of the residents have suggested that a rule be enforced prohibiting persons from standing around the corner
for the time of day, which rule
if enacted would be about as successful as passing an ordinance prohibiting the gathering of birds about the four corners of the intersection of Main and Pittsburg streets. In other words, it can't be done.*Ever since there has been a Brimstone Corner, it has been a gathering place.
It used to be said that every person in town had to go there at least once a day. The estimate is conservative. Since the memory of man raneth not to the contrary, it has been the custom to wait on Brimstone Corner. If you are looking for some one, and he eventually comes along.*The head out of the automobile hasn't changed the custom of the people.
The old residents and a number of new ones continue to hold their gatherings here on Brimstone Corner, and will likely continue to do so for all time to come. It is the most congested spot in town. Autoliters who are not yet full drivers and others who are raw, they never pass the corner
without almost knocking someone down.
Gently it is a boy under ten years of age. In neither the war or during the days of the great rush of the drivers to get to the home of automobile buyers.
Locomotives have been hit, and one man was fatally injured on the corner, but that doesn't worry anybody but the drivers.*Placing a policeman on Brimstone Corner was suggested a few days ago.
There was a suggestion that some one be posted just a friend to stand on the police force, and then go to another place to put him
trouble in on Brimstone Corner, which has a high percentage of drunks and drabs. That is not now, and the policeman is the last and most useful addition on the force. He is the director of traffic.
During the day, he is to pass Brimstone Corner every minute. Sometimes it is easier than that. The street carrosses there too. Were it not for the cop, there would be collisions
daily.*The policeman tells the autoliters to drive slower when driving on the street, or, if not possible, or the road is clear, if you don't believe it to be, just try crossing the corner without a signal from him. He may not pull you in, but he will give a thorough and unhesitating word picture of his opinion of you, coupled with a warning to not do it again.*Some of these days a benevolent council may suddenly erect the poor man's umbrella and an umbrella for him to stand under. It is not planned for him to stand under it, but it is planned for him to stand under it. The reason is one of the fact that the man who invented the policeman's uniform evidently believed that all cops would be employed somewhere in the neighborhood of the Arctic Circle.*After dark the cops rest well because travel is not so heavy as in the daytime, but it becomes tiresome as hard to get them along from approaching villages. Now and then an approaching village will call him back, then by giving a silent shout of thanks. With its windows bright it is virtually impossible to get a signal from the driver until the car has reached the corner. After getting the sign from the cop, the road is clear.*LOTS OF SHIPBUILDING*Ship Causes a Boom in Construction of Steel Vessels.*Ship building activity due to the heavy demand for vessels since the Europe in war began is greater in the United States than it has been for several*More steel ships were being built or were under contract July 1 than at any time in any year since 1893 and there was a greater tonnage of wooden vessels built than since 1897.
Department of Commerce statistics show that July 1, 1915, 12,000 ships were built. July 1, 1895, 1,650 were steel ships, a greater number, 1,600, were steel vessels, and 1,000 were wooden vessels, totaling 2,600 ships.*Prepared Notices

Rev. Smith Boyd found himself standing in the middle of the sidewalk, with fists clenched and his blood surging. The atmosphere before his eyes seemed to be warm, as if it were suddenly slightly. He was tingling from head to toe with a passion which he had repressed and chafed, and smothered since the day of his boyhood! He had arrived, with a strength which was the secret of his compelling voice, to drive out of him all earthly desire, to found himself on the great example which was without the cravings of the body; he had sought to make himself spiritual; but, all at once, this conflict had raged in him a raging tumult, when swept up from the very soles of his feet to his twirling brain, and called him man!

For a quivering moment he stood there, aliv with all the virility which was the richer because of his long repression. He knew many things now, many things which ripened him in an instant, and gave him the heart to trust and the mind to understand and the will to move. He knew himself, he knew life, he knew, yes, and that was the wonderful miracle of life, which peered in on him, he knew love!

He reached suddenly for his watch. Sixty. He could make it! Still impelled by this new creature which had sprung up in him, he started; but at the curb he stopped. He had been in such a whirl of emotion that he had not realized the absence of his hat. He strode into the menswear door, and the rays of the declining sun, streaming dimly through the glass, fell on the scattered little assemblage—as if it had been sent to touch them in mercy and compassion—on the weak and the poor and the pitifully crippled of soul; and a great wave of shame came to him; shame, and thankfulness, too!

He walked slowly up to the platform, and, turning to that reddened sunlight which bathed his upturned face as it was beneficent, he said, in a voice which, in its new sweetness of vibration, stirred even the murkies of these, the numb: "Let us pray."

CHAPTER XVI.

The Creed of Gail. It was that tall, severely correct gentleman waiting at the station, with a bunch of violets in his hand, and the light in his countenance which was never on earth but? It was Gerald Foalard, and he astonished all beholders by his extraordinary conduct. As the beautiful Arly stepped through the gates, he advanced with an entirely unexpressed smile, springing from the half of his feet with a buoyancy too active to be quite in good form. He took Arly's hand in his, but he did not bend over it with his customary courteous gallantry. Instead, he drew her slightly towards him, with a firm and deliberate movement, and, bending his head sideways under the brim of her hat, kissed her; kissed her on the lip!

Immediately thereafter he gave a dignified welcome to Gail, and with Arly's arm clasped tightly in his own, he then disappeared. As they walked rapidly away, Arly looked up at him in bewilderment; then she suddenly hugged herself closer to him with a jerk. As they went out through the carriage entrance, she skipped.

It was good to see Allison, big, strong, forceful, typical of the city and its mighty deeds. His eye had lighted with something more than pleasure as Gail stepped out through the gates of the station; something so infinitely more than pleasure that her eyes dropped, and her hand trembled as she felt that same old warm thrill of his grasp. He was so overwhelming in his physical dominion. He took immediate possession of her, standing by while she greeted her uncle and aunt and other friends, and beaming with justly proud proprietorship. Gail had laughed as she recognized that attitude. Allison was really a big man, one born to command, to sway things, to move and shake and to break great forces; and that, of course, was his manhood in everything. She flushed each time she looked in his direction; for he never removed his gaze from her; bold, confident, up-rose. When a man like that is kind and gentle and considerate, when he is tender and thoughtful and full of devotion, he is a big man indeed!

Rev. Smith Boyd was at the steps of the Sargent house to greet her, and her heart leaped as she recognized another of the dear familiar faces. This was her world, after all; not that world of her childhood. How different the rector looked; or was it that she had needed to go away in order to judge her friends anew? Her eyes were different; deeper, steadier and more penetrating into her own; and, yes, bolder. She was forced to look away from them for a moment. There seemed a warm eagerness in his great eyes, as if everything in him were drawing her to him.

With a rapidity which was a marvel to all her girl friends, Gail had slipped upstairs and into a creamy lace evening frock without having been dressed; and she was in this scantly harmonious setting when Rev. Smith held more tightly to him, clasped it to his breast, oppressed her with the tremendous desire of his whole being to draw her to him, and held her close, as one and a part of him for all time to come, mingling and merging them into one ecstatic harmony. "Gail! Oh, Gail, Gail!"

There was a cry in that repetition of her name, almost an anguish. She stole an upward glance at him, her face pale, her beautiful lips half parted, and in her depthless brown eyes, alive now with a new light which had been born with her, there was no torpidness, though she dropped them slightly, and bent her head still lower. She had made herself an eternal part of him just then, and he sat upon her, upon that unspeakable ascent, and taken her in his arms, and breathed to her of the love of man for woman, the love that never dies nor wavers nor falters, so long as the human race shall endure.

He bent still closer to her, so that not all but entwined her. His warm breath was upon her cheek. The sympathy which was between them bridged the narrow chasm of air, and enveloped them in an ethereal flame which coursed them from head to foot, and had already high welded them into one.

"I need you, Gail!" he told her. "I need you to be my wife, my sweet heart, my companion. I need you to go with me through life, to walk hand in hand with me about the greatest work in the world!" That was it; the greatest work in the world! And what was that work? To live and teach ritual in place of religion; to turn worship into a social observance; to use helpless, bullet as a ladder of ambition; to reduce faith to words, and hope to a recitation, and charity to an obligation; to make pomp and ceremony a substitute for conscience, and to interpose a secretary between the human heart and God!

There was a low cry from Gail, a cry which was half a sob, which came with a sharp intake of the breath, and carried with it pain and sorrow and protest. She had been so happy, in what she fancied to be the near fulfillment of the promptings which had grown so strong within her. No surge of emotion like this had ever swept over her; no such wave of yearning had ever carried her impetuously up and out of herself as this had done. It had been the ecstatic answer to all her dreams, the ripe and rich and perfect completion of every longing in her; yet in the very midst of it had come a word which broke the tame thrill; a thought which had torn the fair web like a rude storm from out the icy north; a devouring gale which, dark and frightening, advanced to destroy all the happiness which might follow this first thrilling consummation of these two perfectly created elements!

"I can't!" she breathed, but she did not withdraw her hand from his grasp. She could not! It was as if those two palms had welded together, and had become parts of one and the same organism.

There was an instant of silence, in which she slowly gathered her swelling bosom, and in which he sat, shocked, stunned, dazed, flexing his own ears. Why, he had known, as positively, and more positively, than if she had told him, that there was a perfect response in her to the great desire which thrashed within him. It had come to him from her like the wavy; of soft music, music which had blended with his own pulsing disposition in a melody so subtle that it drowned the sound to languorous swooning; it had come to him with the delicate far-off pervasiveness of the birth of a new star in the heavens; it had come to him as a fragrance, as a radiance, as the beautiful tones of spring blossoms; something suddenly stronger, and deeper, and sweeter, than the sleep of death. That tremendous and perfect fitness and accord with him he felt in her hand even now.

"I can't," she said again, and neither one noticed that she had unconsciously used the name she had heard from his mother, and which she had unconsciously linked with her thoughts of him. "There could never be a unity of purpose in us," and now, for the first time, she gently withdrew her hand. "I could never be in sympathy with your world, nor you with my world. Have you noticed that we, —

Rev. Smith Boyd, blushing down at that scene, suddenly felt something brushing under his hand. It was the light summer bound of the muscle rack, and three hairs, which had lain in place at the crown of his head, suddenly popped erect. Ten thousand years before, had those three been grouped. Allison would have felt a stone at the back of his neck, but as it was he paused unmolested, nodding carelessly to the young rector, and bestowing on Gail a parting look which was the perfection of easy assurance.

Rev. Smith Boyd waited not a minute in purposeless hesitation or idle preliminary conversation.

"Gail," he said, in a voice which claimed of all the love songs ever written, which vibrated with all the love passion ever breathed, which pleaded with the love appeal of all the dominant forces since creation. Gail had resumed her seat on the end of the piano bench, and now he reached down and took her hand, and held it, unresisting. She was weak and limp, and she averted her eyes from the burning gaze which beamed down on her. Her breath was fluttering, and the hand which lay in her lap was cold and trembling. "Gail, I love you!" He bent his head and kissed her hand. The touch was fire, and she felt her blood leap to it. "Gail, dear," and his voice was like the suppressed crescendo of a tremendous organ flute. "I come to you with the love of a man. I come to you with the love of one inspired to do great deeds, not just to lay them at your feet, but because you are in the world!" He bent lower, and tried to gaze into the brown eyes under those buttering lashes. He held friend and "My father, I am in no doubt, no quandary, no struggle between faith and disbelief. She is my way clearly, and there are no thorns to cut for me. I shall never change."

He looked at her searching for a moment, and then his face grew grave; but there was no coldness in it, nor any alteration in the blueness of his eyes.

"I shall pray for you," he said, with simple faith.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Public is Aroused. Gail in her slim cream lace gown, Gail walked slowly into her boudoir, and closed the door, and sank upon her divan. She did not stop long to let down her hair and change to her daily negligee, nor to punctiliously straighten the room, nor to turn on the beautiful green light; instead, with all the electric bulbs blazing, she sat with her chin in her hand, and, with her body perfectly in repose, tried to study the whirl of her mind.

She was shaken, she knew that, shaken and stirred as she had never been before. Something in the depths of her had leaped up into life, and cried out in agony, and would not stop crying until it was satisfied.

"I need you to walk hand in hand with me about the greatest work in the world!" That was it; the greatest work in the world! And what was that work? To live and teach ritual in place of religion; to turn worship into a social observance; to use helpless, bullet as a ladder of ambition; to reduce faith to words, and hope to a recitation, and charity to an obligation; to make pomp and ceremony a substitute for conscience, and to interpose a secretary between the human heart and God!

There was a low cry from Gail, a cry which was half a sob, which came with a sharp intake of the breath, and carried with it pain and sorrow and protest. She had been so happy, in what she fancied to be the near fulfillment of the promptings which had grown so strong within her. No surge of emotion like this had ever swept over her; no such wave of yearning had ever carried her impetuously up and out of herself as this had done. It had been the ecstatic answer to all her dreams, the ripe and rich and perfect completion of every longing in her; yet in the very midst of it had come a word which broke the tame thrill; a thought which had torn the fair web like a rude storm from out the icy north; a devouring gale which, dark and frightening, advanced to destroy all the happiness which might follow this first thrilling consummation of these two perfectly created elements!

"I can't!" she breathed, but she did not withdraw her hand from his grasp.

A worried expression crossed the brow of Aunt Helen.

"Did you accept him?" and she fairly quivered with anxiety.

"No, Aunt Helen." Quite calmly, piling more despair and still more into the little tray by her side, and shaking down her rippling waves of hair.

Aunt Helen sighed a deep sigh of relief, and smiled her approval.

"Gail, dear, you have shown a degree of carelessness which I am delighted to find in you. If you handle all your affairs so sensibly, you have a brilliant future before you."

"I must be an awful worry to you, Aunt Helen," observed Gail, and walking over, she slipped her arm around Mrs. Davies' neck and kissed her and looked around for her chocolate box.

Gail's maid came in, and Mrs. Davies bade her sister's niece goodnight most cordially, and retired with a great load of her mind; and half an hour later the lights in Gail's pretty little suite went out.

If she lay long hours looking out at the pale stars; if, in the midst of her calm logic, she suddenly buried her face in her pillows and sobbed silently; if, toward morning, she awoke with a little cry to find her face and her hands hot, all these things were but normal and natural. It is enough to know that she came to her breakfast bright-eyed and rosy-cheeked and smiling with the pleasant greetings of the day, and picked up the papers casually, and lit upon the newest sensation of the free and entirely uncured metropolitan press!

The free and entirely uncured metropolitan press had found Vedder court and had made it the sudden focus of the public eye. Those few who were privileged to know intimately the workings of that adult master of the public welfare, The Coram, could have recognized clearly his one hand in the blaze of notoriety which obscure Vedder court had suddenly received. After having endured the contamination and contamination of the Market Square church tenements for so many years, the city had, all at once, discovered that the condition was unbearable! The free and entirely uncured metropolitan press had taken up, with great enthusiasm, the work of poking the finger of scorn at Vedder court. It had published photographs of the disreputable old sets of buildings, and, where they did not seem to drip enough, the artists had retouched them. It had sent budding young Poes and Dickens down there to write up the place. It had sent the sob sisters there in shouls to interview the down-trodden, and, above all things, it put prominently before the public eye the immense crime which the Market Square church wrung from this organized misery!
